IPCA moved up 0.33% in December, ending 2025 with a 4.3% increase

- ▶ December IPCA came in at 0.33%, close to both market forecast (0.32%) and our call (0.35%). In 12 months, IPCA wrapped 2025 at 4.3%, versus 4.5% in November.
- ▶ Compared to our forecast, we highlight the lower-than-expected prints in apparel and personal expenses. Household articles, on the other hand, came in above our forecast. Regarding core metrics, both underlying services and underlying industrials inflations were close to expectations.
- ▶ In the three-month moving average, with seasonally adjusted and annualized data, underlying services inflation moved up to 5.1% (from 3.9%), while underlying industrials declined to 2.1% (from 2.5%). In the same metric, the average of core inflation measures receded to 3.7% (from 3.8%).
- ▶ Our view: The December IPCA came in close to our forecast, with a breakdown also broadly in line with expectations. Regarding the qualitative aspect, core services showed a marginal deterioration, in line with our forecast, albeit with a somewhat different composition: there was a downside surprise in food away from home, offset by an upside surprise in labor-intensive services. This result reinforces the evidence that labor market pressures continue to impact service prices, underscoring our view that this segment will remain under pressure throughout the coming year. With this release, the IPCA closed 2025 at 4.3%, above the target midpoint but within the tolerance band. For 2026, we maintain our inflation expectation at 4.0%.
